Restaurants in Cochin are is based on the fact that a lot of tourists visit the place and in order to attract them these hotels tend to present a nice ambience and quality in the food. This is more prominent in fort Cochin, which is the part of the Cochin with the highest number of visiting tourists of all of the metropolitan area. One other important thing is the neatness of the place. Westerners are particularly curious about the general hygiene of the people of this country have which seem ironical Indian as many of us disagree on the western hygiene methods.

Restaurants in Fort Kochi are designed minding the surge of tourists in to the place. Tourists who reach here are not really interested in dining in highly fancy restaurants with all the glowing lights and the glitter and the glamour. They are not looking for some continental or Chinese restaurant either. They are here to have a bite of the traditional Kerala, and these hotels are equipped to give it to them.

A Cochin hotel always takes good care in making the rooms comfortable for western tourists. Providing toilet papers in the bathrooms is an example for that, and it is a very important one too, as far as westerners are concerned. If it is important for the customer, it is more important for the businessmen. They also try to give the entire place an ambience related to our culture, for example playing traditional Indian classical music in the background of dining rooms and welcoming the guests with a polite â€˜Namasteâ€™.

A Fort Kochi hotel is not any different from any other hotels in the city. But it would always seem to be a good idea to include the ambience of the sea and the beach into the hotel, considering thatâ€™s what the tourists who reach here might want.
