When youâ€™re a small business owner just discovering the wonders of the Internet, youâ€™d likely want join the bandwagon, creating your own site to get the exposure your business needs. More companies are going online, finding ways to expand their presence to win customers. These companies create online displays called â€œweb sitesâ€•, often hiring web designers to streamline and embellish their pages.

Living in San Diego, California, why get left out? With San Diegoâ€™s main economic engines of tourism, international trade and manufacturing, more people are able to afford time and money to establish their own Internet presence as they expand themselves virtually around the world. A question comes to mind: should you make your own web site, or get a web design company? Here are the benefits and drawbacks.

Do it yourself

There are many great reasons to create a web site, foremost of which is theyâ€™re free. You can create online communities or stores using free software such as WordPress, MyBB or KompoZer. There are free â€œhostsâ€• where you can use templates to â€œpoint and clickâ€• to create web sites, pre-desig themselves.

The biggest drawback to doing it yourself is the investment of time and effort just learning and teaching oneself the ropes. While creating a web site isnâ€™t necessarily rocket science, thereâ€™s an almost limitless choices of elements that go into a webpageâ€”design, image, text, and a host of othersâ€”itâ€™s easy to get overwhelmed. Being too particular about details might be a good thing but you could end up, in the end, not doing anything much about your business.

Get someone else

If youâ€™re not up to par with creating your own website, you can always hire a San Diego web design company to do it for you. With the reputable ones, you can count on their knowledge and experience to help you meet your goals through your online presence, while you focus on serving your customers.

There are potential downsides. Depending on the web design company San Diego business owners use, itâ€™s a challenge for any of these companies to work on their customersâ€™ websites in the speedi way possible. Unless youâ€™re also able to secure â€œcopiesâ€• of your web site, your design firm might retain full control over it and â€“ worst case scenario â€“ can shut it down should both of you have unresolved issues.

All in all, you can either design a web site yourself or have a San Diego web design company do that for you. For the latter, be sure to get a reputable one who consistently communicates with you.
