On Choosing a Perfect Venue for Your Wedding by Kindra Leomiti

Article published on April 16th 2012 | Weddings

One of the things that undoubtedly contributes to a great wedding is the venue. Thereâ€™s a long, long list of places to choose from, of course. The key is in determining what suits you best depending on the mood and environment you want to set.

Many couples schedule their wedding during the summer so there would be no weather issue. In line with the season, itâ€™s not unusual to opt for an outdoor location, making the lively event even more animated. However, although summer will give you the least chance of rain, do not overlook the slight chance. To make sure that your wedding location is perfect for you, take into consideration a few things.

First, know how many guests are coming to your wedding. This is a very important factor when choosing a wedding location. Try to envision your wedding; if you only want a small and intimate one, a garden would do fine. However, if you plan on inviting both family clans as well all your friends, then you must find an outdoor venue that can hold all that. Beach and bayside weddings are very good choices for that.

If you and your spouse are very religious and want to get married in a church or a similar place of worship, you will have to book two different venues. During the ceremony itself invite only your closest friends â€“ a church can only hold so much. The rest of the guests can be invited to the reception. And since itâ€™s summertime, opting to hold the party at dawn, twilight or another unconventional time can lend a refreshing feel to the event.

Next, narrow down your selections among the Santa Cruz wedding venues available. Make sure the location offers enough room for guests to mingle with each other and socialize. This would be especially helpful if thereâ€™s more than a handful of children attending, or if you have a string of games lined up. Also, since the Mediterranean climate in California can be a bit scorching, itâ€™s best if the place provides ample shade and there is free-flowing drinks throughout the reception.

Lastly, always have a backup plan. Among Santa Monica wedding venues available, opt for a place that can also accommodate you indoors â€“ if your wedding is in an open area â€“ in case of emergency. If it starts to rain heavily or gets too windy for comfort, it helps to have damage control.
