Personalizing Your Special Occasion: Choosing a Color and Wedding Theme by Kindra Leomiti

Article published on February 21st 2012 | Weddings

Having a particular theme in mind is one good way of starting a couple's wedding plans. Most couples are keen on making their big day special and memorable as possible by choosing their preferred motif and style that reflect their personality. By doing this, a lot of wedding planners do away with standardized themes and help their clients put together a memorable wedding using their preferred motifs and colors.

The opportunity of doing a personalized wedding gives a personal touch to the occasion, making it unique. This is especially true when colors are concerned. Naturally, the couples' favorite color will play a major part in the design. But adhering to a single color would be too dull and uninviting. Hence, professional wedding planners would suggest mixing a couple of palettes that complement each other.

Some couples are keen on making their wedding simple, hence would often opt for light colors. Light colors such a pink and yellow are mostly considered as feminine colors. Using too much of the two colors might compromise the look of elegance. Mixing these two neutral colors with a calmer tone like lemon green should help balance the overall theme. The combination of pink, yellow and green is likened to an afternoon English tea party which can be suggested as a great wedding motif.

Couples can also make a bolder choice by using red as their theme. Red is often considered as over empowering and strong when used too much. Thus, it should be stabilized by other colors such as burnt orange or brown hues. In addition, red roses and some chocolates would look romantic in varnished tables in the wedding venue. For medieval or Victorian motif which Palm Desert wedding venues can provide, a dash of velvet gold and burgundy would look extraordinarily nice.

Light blue and cerulean hues are relaxing colors and are popular choices for wedding themes. However, too much of the blues would render the whole theme boring and cold -not exactly the type of emotion couples would like to convey on the occasion. Hence, blue hues can be balanced by putting silver and white colors to make Palm Springs wedding venues more elegant.

Cold colors are usually appropriate for winter and beach-themed weddings. The bride can wear an aquamarine-colored dress and complement it with set of pearl necklace and earrings. Winter weddings in Pasadena wedding venues would look nice when combined with diamond crystals on the bride's flowers. These and more tips are available when couples make an appointment with wedding planners.
